

Radical Genre Transformation of this I believe.

What learning environment does a classroom offer? Education is critical to a young person's success in life. While certain formulas, writing styles, and language may not be used at an older age, the main idea is how you worked through your education. Time management skills, building relationships, and problem solving are the real take-aways from school. Unfortunately, many students focus too much on the letter grades and neglect the previously mentioned skills. This creates an imbalance of skills that can prove harmful in the career focused society we are in. A healthy balance of the two nurtures a greater chance of a successful career.

Analyzing past experiences in school, I noticed I faltered in multiple aspects. When I started High School, I failed to show effort towards my education. This coupled with the typically toxic environment High School students face nurtures an environment that is the exact opposite of what a 9th-12th grade student needs to succeed. While I could've applied myself towards achieving high grades, I couldn't help but analyze if the environment I was exposed to during the most influential years of my life could be directly correlated with my performance.
