

About Me

March 7, 2023

My name is Holden Perry. I'm currently in my final year of college at the University of Cincinnati. I am studying information technology. I currently am interested in web development, but I would also like to learn about cybersecurity. I would like to apply my skills in the medical field, specifically working to protect sensitive patient documents.

With technology constantly evolving, I found this field to be especially lucrative. I enjoy being a problem solver. From a young age, I found myself disassembling electronics, toys, or anything I got my hands on. Learning how some of these things worked initially sparked my interest.

I like being challenged. IT has different careers on the spectrum that satiate this need. Programming and device repair are just two of the many options available to someone interested in an IT job.
